Huntington, WV (HNN) -- The Oakwood Road Band performed the 2007 season's last Heiner's Bakery, Pullman Square Summer Concert Series show Thursday night.

A rain storm earlier in the day put the concert in jeopardy, but the skies cleared and the concert went on as scheduled. A typical Thursday evening in Huntington. Even though the summer was hot and mostly dry, it seemed like when it did rain, it was on a Thursday, canceling several concerts or limiting the attendance. This Thursday's rain cleared the air and made things cooler, which brought a good crowd out for the last concert.

People of all ages danced to the music. Many children danced in front of the stage and generally had fun. There was an Elvis impersonator. The concert started off with United Way Idol winner, Emily Kinner. Her singing no doubt delighted her family and friends who came to see her, along with the rest of the crowd.

Radio announcer Chuck Black and Angie Fletcher, [dubbed the hardest-working woman in Huntington,] were thanked for their work in helping to make the Concert Series a success for 2007.

The 2007 series opened with the Tams on June 7. That show brought the largest crowd ever to Pullman Square for a summer concert series show. Most of the 2007 concerts were well attended, making it hard to find a parking place on Thursday nights. But, that's the kind of problem most promoters can live with.

The sponsors were thanked for providing $40,000 to make the 2007 summer concert series possible.
