Huntington, WV (HNN) -- The legendary Vogues performed at the Heiner's Pullman Square Concert Series on Thursday night, July 19, 2007 before an appreciative audience limited because of rainy weather.

The Vogues noted every time they came to the Tri-State they seemed to bring rain and Thursday night was no different with heavy rains and storm warnings out. It poured before the scheduled 6 p.m. show start.

Around 7 p.m. the rains had let up and it was decided the show must go on. With an introduction from Chuck Black, The Vogues came on stage around 8 p.m. and started their show. Even though colorful umbrellas came out and many took shelter under the buildings as the rain started again the show went on.

The Vogues were impressive singing their hit songs and bringing back memories for many. Some people started dancing to the music making it a romantic evening on a rainy night.

The show lasted about two hours and received a standing ovation from those near the stage. Afterwards The Vogues signed autographs and had their photos taken with fans giving many of them a memorable night. Because of the weather the show was shortened and Larry Whitt did not get to perform.
